• Florence, (Italy). The writer discusses the art of letter-writing. Tells about his travels through Italy. He is learning Italian, but can't read Dante yet. Quotes an Italian sonnet. Tells of meeting a Mr. Morrison of London, a rich man strongly in favor of reform. Morrison told him a story about James Fenimore Cooper. Believes that Paris society is the only society in Europe worthy of the name. "I had a conversation with Powers the artist the other day & he expressed himself in a most manly manner regarding the wholesale brigand Napoleon." The writer hates "every species of oppression." Objects strongly to the employment of a Rev. Foster. "I had great pleasure in reading Quincy's & Phillips' articles ...". Liked Quincy's article best. Met Baron Julius Jakob

To Anne Warren Weston.

Boston.. The writer tells of her delightful journey in the White Hills, and her happiness in marriage. Intends to visit the poor and distressed (in her husband's parish?) Reports that Henry Brewster Stanton "thinks they will get Mr. Amos Augustus Phelps at the Free Church." The writer understands that Mr. Phelps's (deceased) wife "left word for him to marry again," and that the Cambridge ladies are being invited to the house where he boards. Suggests the addressee's going there, although "I don't believe he is quite so much a favorite of yours as formerly." The writer congratulates the addressee on her certainty about the peace question. "I suppose you think Orange Scott in great delusion, but...he seemed to me nearer right than Garrison."

Clapton (London). Gives an exposition of the wrong done the writer by (John) Saunders (editor of the People's Journal). "He now confesses that he has spent £1,000 to put us down." The writer is threatened with ruin. "The rumour of his debts has for some time had that effect on our own creditors." While friends and relatives have done nothing for them (the writer and his wife), "those whom we had treated as enemies" are the first to assist them. Mentions especially Dr. (John) Campbell of The Christian Witness, "whom for the sake of Garrison we had sharply assailed." States that "Garrison himself turned a cold shoulder." The writer excepts Wendell Phillips, F. Douglass, H. [redacted] Night, Maria Weston Chapman and the addressee from those of the Anti-Slavery party who deserve "utter condemnation in this case."
